

The Thai Baht (THB) is the standard unit of currency in Thailand. There are 100 Satang to 1 Baht.

Banknotes are issued in denominations of 1000, 500 100, 50 and 20 Baht.

Coins are issued in denominations of 10, 5, 2 and 1 Baht also 50 and 25 Satang.

Money exchange booths are readily available at all the shopping malls and at banks. Exchange rates fluctuate daily (sometimes many times a day) which can affect how much cash you receive when you change your money. There is sometimes a fee applied to the transaction.

There are many major Thai banks including, Bangkok Bank, Siam Commercial Bank, UOB, Kasikorn Bank and Siam City Bank. They are open from Monday to Friday 08.30 -15.30

Several international banks also have offices in Thailand with Western Union Money Transfer readily available, mainly co-located with major bank in shopping malls. ATMs are in abundance, and cash may be obtained on many international bank cards. (Please check with your bank before arrival in Thailand).

You should be aware that many shops in Thailand, while they may accept credit cards, will often charge you more for using one. The typical surcharges are 3% for Visa or MasterCard and 5% for American Express. The reason: The credit card companies charge the merchant for handling the transaction for them. Of course, the credit card companies hate it when the merchant does this - it's specifically prohibited in the agreement the merchant signs with the credit card company. But from the merchant's standpoint, he's just being fair - if you want to use a credit card, you should pay the cost of it and not the merchant's other customers. This practice is never encountered in hotels, restaurants or major department stores, but is quite common everywhere else.
